

Mike Stoger Facebook, 25. August 2016

Didi Sinnhuber and I went out yesterday to climb the Journey into the unknown . The climb leads up the 700 m North Face of the Laliderer Falk in the Karwendel range. This part of the Alpen Nationalpark is very remote, wild and beautiful. It was our first time there and the emptiness of the Falkenkar reminded me on some remote climbing locations in the pacific north west! I noticed that the place was completely void of any sign of wildlife! Non of the usual birds of pray, mountain goats or ibex that one encounters all over the alps.